

After reaching the camp a man was dispatched to Logan for more aid. Thirty-five men went up the cañon at once, reached the camp at half an hour after midnight, and started for the slide at daybreak. These, with the number already there, worked unsuccessfully until noon, then sent for further assistance. Thirty men went up Saturday night, and two of the missing teams were found, but no traces of the men. At midnight another messenger was sent to Logan, and early Sunday morning fifty more men started out. Some time during the day the bodies were found and brought to this city.

The two men killed are Wm. King, of Logan, and Nephi Osterholdt, of Bear Lake. The former was found in the bottom of the creek, with bruises on his head, and is supposed to have been killed instantly. The other man was standing upright, holding a shovel, and seems to have suffocated almost at once, since the searching party dug within four inches of him on the day of the accident. Both men are married and have small families. Their funeral services will be held in the Logan Tabernacle on Tuesday morning.

AMATEUR

Logan, March 29th, 1880.

CHOICE CORN-FED BEEF, California
Mutton and Spring Lamb, at m3 WHITE & SONS.